Cut Works

Creating impactful designs for life, work and play

AVIA USTANNY-COLLINDER
Senior business reporter
collindera@jamaicaobserver.com

Cut Works Architecture Limited is preparing to become an architectural brand which is known regionally for perfecting designs for the individual property owner and the tropical environment.

David Cuthbert, principal architect and one of the company's founding directors told the Jamaica Observer, "Our aim is to become a single source for all things related to architecture, further extending our services into consultancy, interior design, project management, and bespoke construction.

David Cuthbert is an experienced Registered Architect in Jamaica, having been engaged in the development of residential, educational, commercial, government and healthcare facilities throughout the region. He has published papers on topics including sustainability and the emergence of modern architecture in the Caribbean.

His company, Cut Works is one of 17 companies in the Jamaica Business Corporation Accelerator Programme which prepares firms for funding and growth.

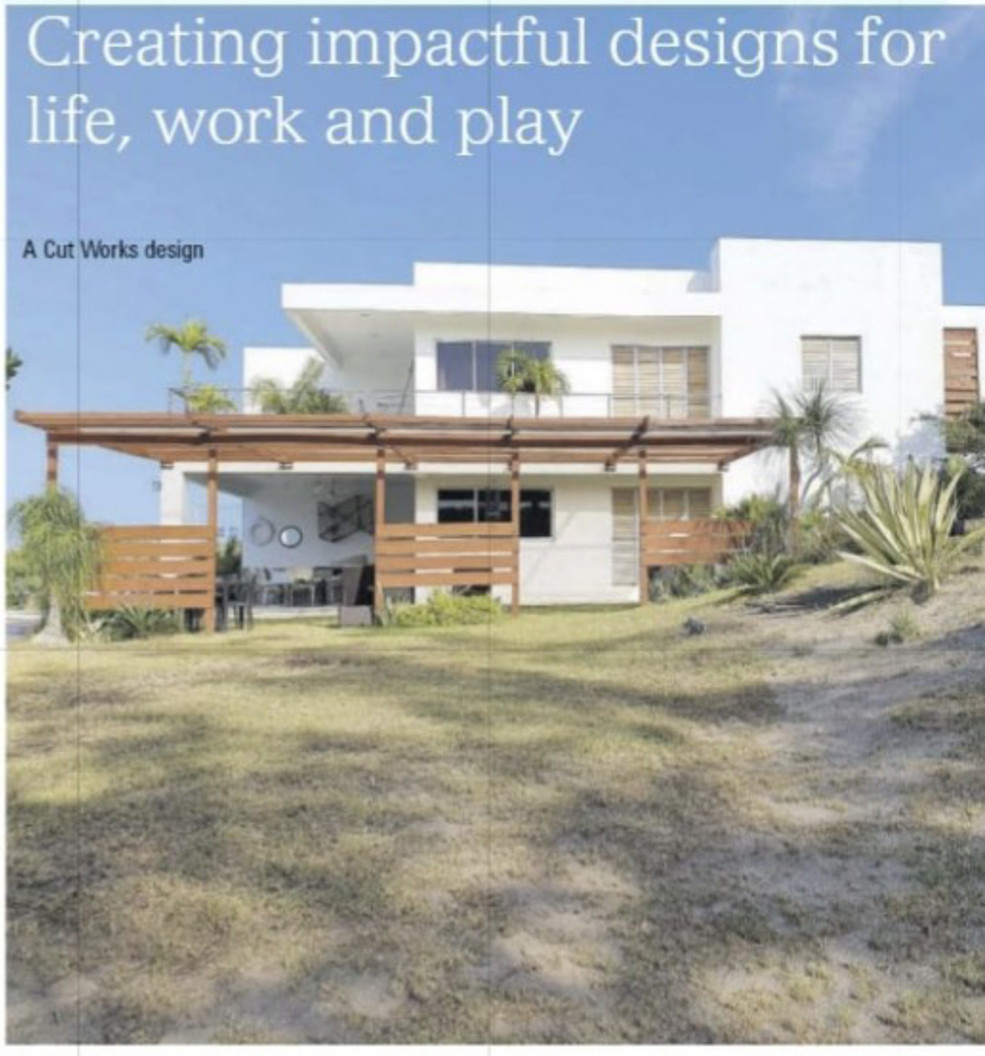

The principal architect shared, "As architects and designers we create spaces inspired by the culture and the tropical environments of the Caribbean, and creating a regional practice is part of our development strategy."

Cut Works was registered in 2017 and operates from Lady Musgrave Road in Kingston at the Hub, which is a co-working space. The business now utilises a full-time staff of three but takes on additional talent as required on a per-project basis.

The company indicates on its website: "CutWorks Architecture Limited is a small, full-service architecture firm practice located in Kingston, Jamaica. We work in the residential, commercial and development sectors with an emphasis on modern, sustainable design. We are a diversified practice offering services in architecture, interiors and project management

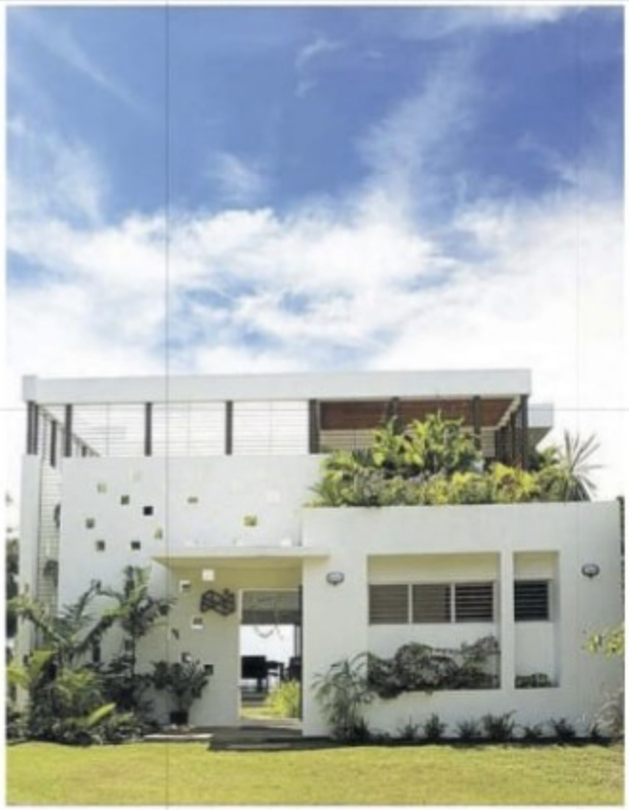

David Cuthbert, prinicpal architect at Cut Works

A Cut Works design

A rendering by Cut Works Architecture

Cut Works targets mid-career professional families looking to design either their "forever homes" as well as retirement/ investment properties.